NATIONAL PARKS INVITE TOURISTS

Nine Big National Playgrounds

Few people realize that this government owns some of the most beautiful scenery in the world. Everyone is familiar with Yellowstone. Scattered over the western country from the Canadian boundary down to Mexico are eight other national parks equally as great in many respects as Yellowstone, if not equally as famous.

Away up in the northern part of Montana is Glacier, with sixty glaciers and 500 lakes. From the scenic standpoint it outdoes Switzerland.

Then just west of Denver is Rocky Mountain National Park. Known to many of you as Estes Park. It is often referred to by visitors as the "children's paradise" because of the many things for children to enjoy within its scenic boundaries.

In South Dakota close to the Black Hills you will find Wind Cave National Park. Then tucked away down in the southwestern corner of Colorado reposes Mesa Verde National Park. Follow that same southwestern trail and you will run right into three of California's national parks, Yosemite, Sequoia National Park and General Grant National Park.

Now, then, if any of your friends lament the fact that Europe is closed to summer visitors, ask them point blank if they have ever visited all nine national parks.

As a little tip before you go be sure to pack in your golf clubs, your tennis racket, your rod and reel and Winchester, and last but not least, your camera. You will surely need most of them in which ever park you land.

The Burlington has made special provisions for the extra travel and is featuring particularly Yellowstone, Glacier and Rocky Mountain, as it has through train service to each of these three leading national parks. The advertising given them by the government and by the various railroads which reach them will have the tendency, it is believed, to wear away the foreign-born tourists in respect of how soon the war-ridden countries of Europe are again in a condition to receive visitors.

The closing of the European countries certainly has been a boon to national park travel and it has probably been the one great factor that has given impetus to the "See America First" idea.

The rare version of the Bible which in one place declares "Thou shalt not need to be afraid for any burglar at night" should create a furore in New Jersey until it was explained that "burglar" meant bogie, and is the word which the King James version renders as "terrors."—Springfield Republican.

Prof. J. C. McGregor, of Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa., asked one of his classes questions about men and current events, and among other answers was told that Percy Haughton was president of Harvard.
